NEW WHEAT VARIETIES—RIVAL FAKE STRAINS.

Through the means of head selection varieties of wheat have been developed at the Ohio Experiment Station which are rivaling many of the so-called western or Alaska wheats. From the old Poole wheat has been developed a new variety known as the Portage; from the Fultz wheat, the Trumbull; and from the Gypsy, the strain known as the Gladden. All of these new varieties have yielded in tests from 8 to 12 bushels per acre higher than the original strains from which they were selected.

The Gladden, which promises to be one of the coming wheats in Ohio, has been distributed to many of the county experiment farms, so that the coming season a commercial supply will be available. The new variety is a hard winter wheat and has excellent milling qualities, specialists state.
